7. Research interests

- Current research is focused on the role of cognitive mechanisms, both explicit (e.g., autobiographical memory) and implicit (e.g., implicit memory; priming) in generating subjective/emotional (cognition-emotion relation), behavioral, and psycho-physiological human responses, more specifically, on the role of (a) rational/functional and irrational/dysfunctional beliefs and (b) response hopes and/or expectancies on various psychological and medical outcomes related to mental health and cancer. When clinical trials are used as research instruments the analysis employed is typically multilevel, concerning: (1) outcomes (i.e., efficacy and/or effectiveness); (2) theory/mechanisms of change (both psychological and neurobiological); and (3) economical aspects (e.g., cost-effectiveness, cost-utility). A specific research interest is related to the theory and practice of cognitive hypnosis/hypnotherapy as part of the cognitive neuroscience paradigm and the use of technological developments in psychotherapy (i.e., virtual reality therapy; robotherapy).
 - Key words: clinical cognitive (neuro)sciences; evidence-based and cognitive-behavioral therapies, clinical psychology, psychology and technology (robotherapy, virtual reality therapy), cognitive unconscious (implicit/unconscious information processing), evolutionary psychology, genetic counseling.

8. Grants/projects - Selection

Note: As follows, I list only the major grants (still object of continuation/publication), of which I am the Principal Investigator (PI). There are two other completed grants of which I was PI (one national and one international), and about 10 past and/or ongoing national and international grants (i.e., FP7), in which I am a main partner (i.e., representing my organization in a consortium), a secondary investigator, or a research member in the research team.
